TECHNICAL NOTES

This is a line dance and therefore should be danced in a straight line and not in a circle. This has the advantage that all the dancers are always facing the audience. Holding hands, or shoulders, is optional and should be used by experienced Greek dancers.

Arms should be in a “W-shape” at shoulder level for the Roditiko, “V-shape” and high above head when dancing the PONTIAN STOMPS, or extended out for the PENTOZALI’s Shoulder Hold.

If holding shoulders, then follow these instructions to avoid problems and potential injury. Dancers should stand next to others who have similar height. The right arm should be placed so that the hand goes on the shoulder of the next dancer from behind, and the left arm from in front.

If holding hands with the W-shape Hold, each dancer should have the right palm up and the left palm down for holding, elbows down but hands at shoulder or chest level. Those at the ends can put their free arms at the back of waist, palms facing out. This method makes it easier and more natural when bodies have to turn quickly (as in the Roditiko).

Dances. The following Youtube video should help to show the characteristics of the dance steps and how they should look. The beginning of the dance usually shows the basic steps that are included in this line dance.

Siganos is often danced before Pentozali in the same dance. Both are from Crete. This line dance only uses the basic steps of these Greek dances.

Pyrrhic is from Pontos. Note how dancers bounce with their knees, and shake their bodies when stomping. This, as well as the highly raised arms, is a character of Pontian dances.

Roditiko is a lively dance from Rhodes. There are different versions of the steps. A simpler and easier one, as shown in the first video, can also be used.

Pentozali is from Crete is a very energetic and well known Greek dance. The little skip of the R foot on Count 1 is very important and so are the snappy kicks or feet movement for a more authentic flavour of this special dance. The 2 triple steps at the end can be done by stepping in place (easier), or optionally, by stepping one foot in front of the other.

*Counting. Greek dance steps are usually counted by the steps, regardless of the timing, 1, 2, 3, and so on up to 16 sometimes. Being a line dance, a slower counting, from 1 to only 8, is used here, together with & and ah counts to denote quicker steps. Greek dancers should just dance on based on the rhythm, if this description is too confusing. The two triple steps at the end of the Pentozali (Count 3a& and 4a&) are each done over one Count of music. The “a” or “ah” splits a half-count (denoted by an “&”), so it has a duration of ¼ of a count.
